HIGH STREET FAVOURITE HEADS TO LONDON FASHION WEEK

Tips for the TOP

FASHION fans are gearing up for a first tonight as Topshop goes from the High Street to high fashion.

The clothing chain will take to the catwalk alongside big name designers for the first time ever at London Fashion Week.

The show, which will be taking place in London's posh Berkeley Square, features outfits from the latest Topshop Unique collection.

First launched back in 2001, store chiefs are hoping it will put the brand on the international map once and for all.

In fact, they are so confident of the cutting-edge appeal of their product, Topshop are even getting the unexpected and strive to do it first. Put simply, they want to achieve designer status in their own right.

And getting a London show will be great motivation for the 16-strong in-house design team, where creativity is allowed reign free.

Chick

We can expect all the pizzazz, spot-on style and wearability we have come to expect from the UK's favourite fashion store.

First launched back in 2001, store chiefs are hoping it will put the brand on the international map once and for all.

In fact, they are so confident of the cutting-edge appeal of their product, Topshop are even getting at this great gear from their mainline autumn/winter collection and you'll see why they are a mainstay. The actual show is likely to be a slick affair and the Unique designs are being kept top secret.

But with wads more money than your average British designer, guests shouldn't be disappointed.

Producers and choreographers will ensure this is the most memorable show of the week.

And if they make the impact predicted by fashion pundits - along with a splash across the pond - they really will be Britain's top shop.
